Ankh-ef-(en)-Maat

Pottery, light green wash, details added in black
Third Intermediate Period, 22nd Dynasty
From Western Thebes, the Ramesseum
H. 13.1 cm. W. 5.1 cm. D. 3.6 cm.

A mummiform shabti wearing a plain tripartite wig. The arms are crossed on the chest and the clenched hands hold a pair of hoes that are added in black. A rectangular basket is boldly painted in outline on the back of the figure. Carrying straps cross diagonally over the basket giving the impression that they are attached to the bottom. The face is rudimentary in its modelling. Large eyes with eyebrows are added in black. Ears protrude in front of the lappets of the wig. The lower legs and feet are missing. The front of the shabti has a vertical column of a painted inscription within a frame that is closed at the top giving the name of the owner as Ankh-ef-(en)-Maa(t)¹ (He lives for Truth) with the title of God's Father of Amen.

As a group, shabtis for Ankh-ef-(en)-Maat are quite large in size. They are from the excavations undertaken by James Quibell at the Ramesseum in Western Thebes in 1895–1896.² Made of pottery that has a green wash with details added in black, the majority of the shabtis give no title for Ankh-ef-(en)-Maat. A few give the title of God's Father of Amen, and one gives the title God's Father of Amen-Re (see the following database).

Excavations at the Ramesseum by the Franco-Egyptian Archaeological Mission of Western Thebes during the January–February 2022 season discovered a group of five shabtis for Ankh-ef-(en)-Maat in the North-West Outbuildings Sector [STI.TR. To07] – the tomb of Se-hotep-ib-Re, a dignitary of the Middle Kingdom who is only known by name only.³ It seems that Ankh-ef-en-Maat was buried in a cavity that was dug in the south wall of the underground corridor of Se-hotep-ib-Re's tomb. According to Dr. Christian Leblanc and anthropologists the tomb was used for 'no less than a hundred people between the 21st and 25th Dynasty.'⁴ The tomb had been looted in antiquity and despite being excavated by Quibell, several elements of funerary equipment of Middle Kingdom date were found including oars, rowers, a cabin and masts from model boats as well as a fertility doll, known as a 'paddle doll.'⁵ A wooden coffin fragment and cartonnage fragments dating from the Third Intermediate Period were also found, together with numerous bones.⁶
